The present invention relates to a system which is used to air condition an automobile by compressing air for a pressurized air passage to an air conditioning system, and to an air pressurizing apparatus using this system. This type of air pressurizing system is disclosed in Japanese Utility Model First Provisional Publication No. 5-314870. This known art has a main body, a plurality of air tubes having ends thereof to be connected to, respectively, an air pressurizing chamber defined in the main body and a refrigerant passage defined in the main body, and an air pressurizing means. In this known art, the air pressurizing chamber includes an outer tube, a pair of ring-shaped side tubes, and a pair of ring-shaped bottom tubes. These three tubes are provided so as to surround the refrigerant passage. In this construction, air pressurized by the air pressurizing means flows in the refrigerant passage to expand the passage. Air in the passage is then drawn into the air pressurizing chamber via the inlet ports defined in the side and bottom tubes and then discharged from the outlet ports defined in the side and bottom tubes. In this known art, the inlet and outlet ports are defined in the inner tubes of the side and bottom tubes, which are elastic. When the air in the refrigerant passage expands, the air pressurizing chamber is compressed, and the air pressurizing means moves vertically, resulting in the connection between the inlet and outlet ports being changed. In this known art, the inlet and outlet ports are defined in the inner tubes, which are elastic, in order to change the connection between the inlet and outlet ports. Therefore, when the air pressurizing chamber is compressed, the outer tube and inner tubes expand, thus compressing the air pressurizing means, resulting in the connection between the inlet and outlet ports changing. Consequently, the flow of air from the inlet port to the outlet port is interrupted, and the flow of air from the inlet port to the outlet port does not depend only on the elasticity of the inner tube. What's New in the Photoshop CS4?

Apple has opened up the APIs that it uses to measure iPhone battery life, in an effort to help developers create more accurate battery life estimators. The first change is when you look at your battery usage in Settings, you'll now be able to see how your usage over the past 24 hours differs from your usage over the last seven days. So if you're seeing a drop in usage that's not reflected in your usage over the last seven days, there's something you're doing that is skewing the results. The other API change is more subtle, and appears to be more like a feature. If you want to see if there is a difference in your iPhone's battery life, you'll now be able to do so on a per app basis. There are two different things you can do: first, you can select an app and look at its battery usage over the past 24 hours. The second is to look at the battery usage per app over the last seven days. Apple says that the changes are a way of making Apple's own battery life tracking and measurement results more accurate. It's unclear if the number of iPhone users that are able to do this is high enough to make much of a difference, but some developers are already taking advantage of the improved battery usage data. The big change that could potentially affect users is the ability to use the data to tweak apps. Many apps don't clean up correctly when idle, and the data that Apple is now allowing developers to analyse could help developers develop apps that do better with inactive periods. If the trend continues, we could see apps that are more aware of their battery usage, and apps that work to save battery while in idle periods. FTC: We use income earning auto affiliate links. More.
